“Bringing Possibilities to Reality”

THE GIANTS OF MINATURE WORLD

The story of the Giants brings to light how we as humans naturally turn our trust and hope in future over to other people who we think know more than we do.

The Giants of Miniature World

In a place far, far away beyond the edges of the celestial galaxy, beyond the place where time and space collide exists a miniature world full of miniature people. Well, they are miniature by earth's standards, but they are larger than life to their neighbors around them. They are Giants to the neighboring lands. They have one thing that none of their neighbors have. They have a very powerful thing. They have the ability to see into the future.

These people can predict with some accuracy what is coming and the others who live nearby adore them for it. They pay homage to it. They pay for it. They follow it. They long to know how they can have this gift, this secret knowledge, yet at the same time, they do not want it for themselves. That is too much responsibility. They are content to let the Miniature World Giants see for them. There are groups that have been formed in each sector: industrial, commercial, monetary, spiritual, educational, sports, etc. All of these sections have Miniature Giants in charge. These Giants spend days, months, years arguing over which version of the future is best and the others around them wait to see who comes out on top. They pick a favorite. They place bets. They invest heavily in their Giant, in that version of the future. And they wait. They wait for their Giant's future to come true.

In the meantime the neighbors form their own groups, name themselves followers of such and such. They give money to that group. They spend time building the foundation for that group. They argue and strife for that group. They push out anyone who disagrees with them in that group. They have meetings when their Giant speaks and discuss all he/she meant to say. They become powerful as their Giants became powerful. They become strong, invested heavily in the outcome of their Giant's future.

Soon they realize that their future is at stake. They look around and see other groups following other Giants. What if their Giant loses? What if their Giant's future is not what he/she says it is? They put forth a call to action. It is up to them to create this future they believe in for cannot lose. They make committees. They make signs and draft legislation. They argue and fight with other Giants' groups. Pretty soon, the other Giants' groups follow. Their future is at stake here! They cannot let their Giant lose. They are now committed to that Giant's vision of the future. They have made plans and commitments to this future their Giant told them would come true. They cannot lose.

That is when the wars begin. The Giants now fight for honor, for dignity. They cannot let their people down. They have made promises and agreements based on their version of the future. It is now not just a vision, a possibility. It is now who they are. Their bodies, their selves, and their very lives depend on this future coming true.

They begin to kill anyone who disagrees. The bombs fly. The guns fire. People die, all holding onto what they feel is the right and the only version of their future. Before you know it, the whole cosmos of miniature blows up in a one gigantic battle, a future no one saw coming.

It does not have to be this way. No one said the Giant's future was the only future, the one possibility in infinite possibilities. No one said the followers had to follow, or give up their own power, or fight! No one said that the Giant's had to be followed at all! That was the choice of the people. The people chose to follow the Giant's because why? Because it was easier than being a Giant themselves.

We all can predict our own futures to some degree. People are actually very predictable! We are all unique individuals and groups who like to move together, be together, bond together, and fight for a cause together. It makes us feel less alone, less vulnerable, and more powerful than we feel we are. For often we just feel like merely Miniature People.

So we give our power, our responsibility, our decisions, our lives, and even our common sense up to someone we believe who knows better, seems to do better, or just acts more confident than we feel! These people we call Giants. But Giants are simply people, like us, miniature and all.

So how do we find people who we respect, honor, and want to follow in life without getting trapped in the power struggle these Giant's faced? We find Mentors.

Mentors are not Giants. They are just people who have gone through whatever it is we are going through now. They are Lighthouses who mark the way saying, "I have been there before. This is how I made it through. You can too." They do not ask you to follow. They ask you to choose. They ask you to blaze your own trail, find your own path, become your own person, your own Giant. Those are the people that when you succeed far beyond them will applaud you, celebrate you, and love that they just happened to be a part of your journey.

We all have Giants and Mentors in our Miniature Worlds. From family to school, to work to society, they are there. We get to choose. Do we follow a Giant or do we find a Mentor. The choice is up to us. The endings look very different. But they all begin the same... "There lived a people."

What people are you?

As we all know, the future is wide open. But that wide openness is terrifying to anyone interested in survival. The sameness of day to day living creates a sense of security. People are very invested in creating an idea for a future they would like to have and they will do anything, even take another's chance for a future away, in order to make their future the one that wins.

Who are the Giants in your life? Who is it you have given your power of your perception over to? Are we one of those Giants? Are you?
