The Possibility Path Stories

Squiggly World and Square Ville

Beyond the scope and time of what you would call normal, lives a world that looks very much like a fun house mirror. Up is down. Down is up. Fat is thin. Thin is tall. Circles equal lines to infinity and nothing makes any sense at all... to you. To them, the people who live in Squiggly World, this is their normal. This is what they have been born, raised and lived with their whole lives. They have learned quite successful coping skills that have allowed them to exist in Squiggly World for a very long time.

One day a traveler arrives. She is from Square Ville, a place where linear looks a lot more like your 3D reality. The laws of physics in Squiggly Town make her ill. She can barely handle talking to the people there. They don't make any sense at all. Tall is thin. Thin is tall. Circles are lines that go on forever. Their reference points and her reference points are just too far off to understand anything either is saying. She leaves Squiggly World and goes back to Square Ville upset and confused. She tells all the people in Square Ville how messed up and odd the people are in Squiggly World. She tells them about the linear circles and the fun house mirrors and how it all made her ill. The people of Square Ville are afraid. They don't ever want to go to Squiggly World.

The people of Squiggly World feel the same way about Square Ville. They tell all their friends about how odd the girl from Square Ville was, how she didn't make any sense and how at the end of the day she yelled at them for making her ill. They decided never to go to Square Ville.

Then one day another stranger walked into Squiggly World. He sat down on their upside down table as easy as if he had been born and bred there. He knew all their languages, was fond of looking at himself in the fun house mirror and was easily able to navigate the linear circles. They really liked him. He felt like one of them. But then the stranger began to tell them about his visits to Square Ville. He told them how the houses were square and the mirrors were straight and everyone walked on flat sidewalks lined with trees that only went up and down. The squiggly people had no idea! They were fascinated by the way things work in Square Ville. Without any judgment or fear or malice, the stranger told them all great stories about Square Ville. And then he said one thing that shocked them all. He said they should visit Square Ville someday.

The people of Squiggly World got a little upset by this notion. Visit Square Ville, where all the trees go up and down and the sidewalks are linear? How could that be? How would they walk? What would they see? And suddenly a few of them understood how the girl from Square Ville felt about Squiggly World.

“Why that must have been horrible for her to see herself in fun house mirrors when her world is so linear!” a very compassionate Squiggly lady exclaimed. “And to eat the upside down food when hers had always been right-side up? That must have been very confusing. No wonder she got ill and yelled at us. No wonder at all!” And the people of Squiggly World agreed and shook their heads at the thought of it. They would never survive in Square Ville with its flat sidewalks and straight trees!

But, then the stranger offered a solution. “How about I go with you to Square Ville?” he said. “I can be your guide, your translator. I can explain how everything works for you and help you adapt.” Well, not everyone in Squiggly World was so fond of this idea. But a few were willing and a few went with this stranger who was so familiar with both Squiggly World and Square Ville.

Before long people were going back and forth between the two worlds like it was nothing at all. There were even a few straight trees seen popping up in Squiggly World and fun house mirrors had suddenly become all the rage in Square Ville.

All this happened because one stranger was able to, without judgment or fear, cross the divide that had divided them so. Both the people of Square Ville and Squiggly World lived happily ever after, or so this story goes.

There are many analogies for the story of Squiggly World and Square Ville, metaphors for the world you live in. From countries to families, landscapes to regions of the world, these people could be your neighbors on earth. They could also be people you just don't understand. Mental illness, family dynamics, family or origin patterns, religions, race, ethnicity, sexual orientation and gender identity and just living in different parts of one country also set up the scenarios seen here in Squiggly World and Square Ville.

What Makes You You matters. It does become your Small Town, Squiggly World or Square Ville!

The reality of the world is that we are all very different. From sea to shining sea and star to star, there are beings who were born, grew up and adapted to whatever culture, land, belief system and physical structure they were raised in. By not judging, but by learning and understanding them all with a respectful fascination, one can be pulled out of the drama of seclusion and into the reality of wonder, bridging the gap between worlds.

There will be a great need for strangers who can bridge the gaps, who can understand different worlds in the years to come. They will be valued by all for their ability to straddle both worlds. Are you one of those people? Do you want to be?

The story of Squiggly World and Square Ville is one of building compassion, understanding, and respect for people, no matter what Small Town they were born into or live within. It is seeing life from another's point of view, even if we disagree with that point of view! It is up to us to find those strangers to help us understand. If we are willing to open up and see one another with respect, compassion, and understanding, we can begin to bridge the gaps that divide us all.
